

door of the restaurant, and each man as he went out was given a cup of coffee.

"We might have chosen a larger and rather more pleasant place in which to give our dinner," said Dr. Kenyon, looking around the dark, cold hall, "but we could not have found one where the people would not have come to us there. Here, however, they feel at home. This is a place where many of them are in the habit of coming."

"Please, may I have something?" asked a poor woman who entered.

"Certainly, certainly, this is for all," said the woman who was given a seat at a little table by herself, apart from the men.

Most of those who were at the dinner were known to Dr. Kenyon, as they had attended a street service on Sundays; others were strangers. Of all the latter he made special inquiries. "Out of works you say, and obtain what you can do? What has been your business, or what can you do?"

"I'm a steam filter."

"Well, here is my card: take that to — & Co., to-morrow morning, and they will give you work to do. If they do not come back to me, and I'll go with you somewhere else."

Another man, just over from England, had been a cook, and was now working in a livery stable. Dr. Kenyon's card was given him to call at the Doctor's house next day and he would be given some work to do there. As the men went out of the restaurant they thanked Dr. Kenyon, and the old man turned to the woman who had given him such a good dinner. "God bless you! You're a good man!"

"Yes, I never lack for a good dinner as we've had to-day."

The men said a few words about their various experiences, and the old parson person who had stopped to thank the giver for the dinner.

"Dr. Gustavus A. Sage, of No. 46 West Twenty-third Street, expected to be here to provide a meal," said Dr. Kenyon, "and when he came he was anxious about his work." The expense of the dinner was defrayed by certain prominent residents of New York who withheld their names. They are the same men, however, who pay a large amount for the services of the church every Sunday afternoon when he preaches in the street near the Roosevelt Street Ferry.

Hannigan resigned as the organist and the friendless children at the Girls' Lodging House, No. 27, Madison Avenue, a dinner was served at 1 o'clock, consisting of turkey and other Thanksgiving Day cheer. On one evening there was a regular turkey dinner, and on another plates of ham, bacon, and beans, with rice, and so on. The entertainment consisted of recitations, music and dancing. Refreshments followed, consisting of ice cream, cake and fruit. Little children, twelve years old, and surprised by the gift, said, "We're rich now, we're rich now, we're rich now." The Rev. Mr. Talmage, who had given a sermon had a poor dinner to-day than ever they ate at home," remarked the Deputy Warden at the Tomb. "We have spent all time cooking chickens and feeding the prisoners. Then, however, we have all the time to eat, and every prisoner says the meal is better than the soup is left, and every prisoner says he can't eat any more."

At this time the prisoners were walking around the corridor, laughing and smoking chickens, and the Rev. Mr. Talmage said, "I am glad even Alexander Campbell, the boy who had been sentenced to prison for life in the day before, waited upon his fellow prisoners. There were 315 prisoners to feed, and each one had a plate of food, and all the men had all the soup that was left, and every prisoner says he can't eat any more."

At the time the soup was left, and every prisoner says he can't eat any more."
